

by the event, Syd joined the others at the EMI canteen for Gilmour's wedding reception. After unnerving some unsuspecting guests, Barrett vanished into the night without a trace. None of them have seen him since, and by their own rule refuse to initiate any contact for fear of upsetting him and causing another mental breakdown.

The Wish You Were Here tour concluded at Knebworth on July 5, 1975. For Waters, the most remarkable episode was Roy Harper trashing his trailer because he couldn't find his stage clothes. This left his hand bleeding pretty badly, a scene that would later be recreated in the film version of The Wall (where Pink destroys his hotel room). This incident also delayed setting up the band's sound system – which normally would have delayed the show – but as the show started with two WW II spitfires buzzing the crowd, followed by a series of spectacular effects ending with a crescendo of flares and rockets – it had to go on – sound system or no.

The show went on despite power supply problems wreaking havoc on Rick's keyboards during the first set, and concluded with a spirited version of 'Dark Side' and an encore of 'Echoes'. The fans loved the show, but the critics, who were pissed off about being banned from the backstage area, already had enough ammunition to unleash one

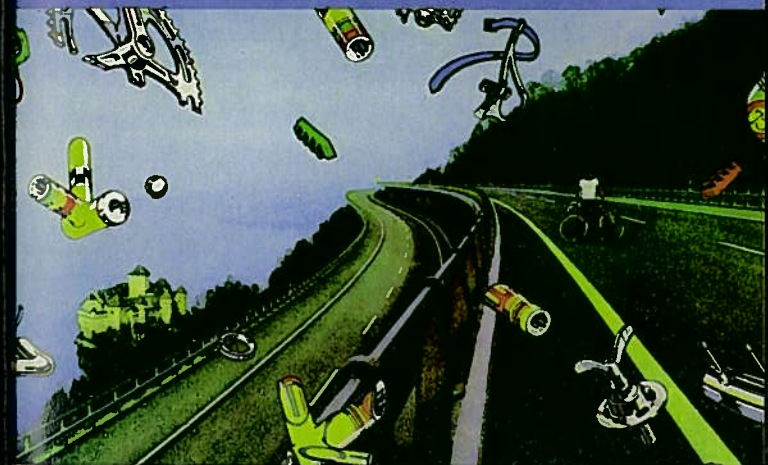

OFFICIAL PROGRAMME
KNEBworth PARK
SATURDAY JULY 5TH

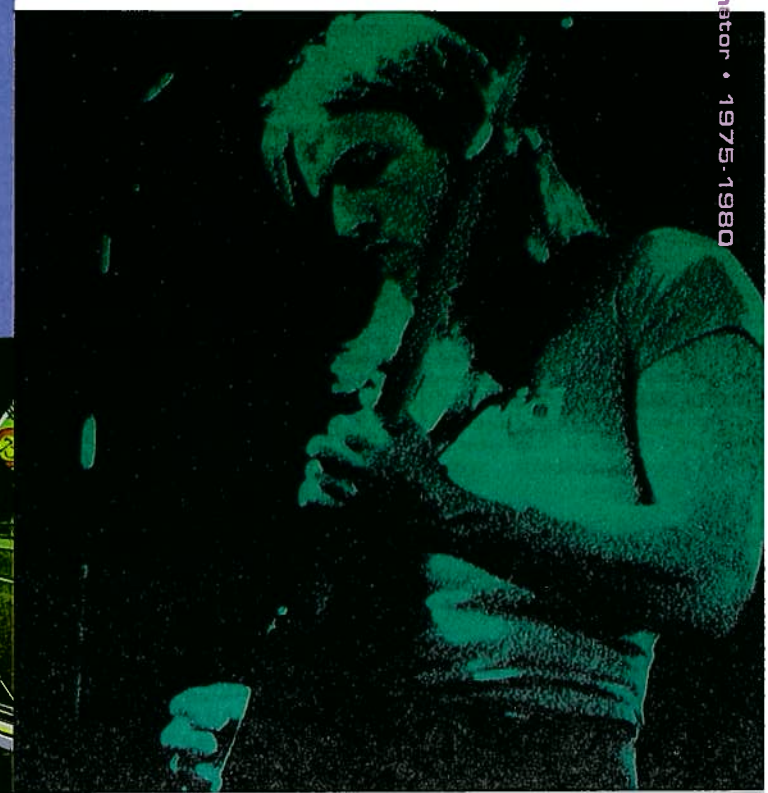

FREDERICK BANNISTER PRESENTS
PINK FLOYD
THE STEVE MILLER BAND
CAPTAIN BEEFHEART
AND HIS MAGIC BAND
ROY HARPER
AND TRIGGER
LINDA LEWIS

PRICE 30 PENCE

of the most savage attacks of the band's career. Pink Floyd were to play no further concerts in Britain - or anywhere else for that matter until 1977.

Wish You Were Here was finally released on September 15, 1975 with Storm Thorgerson designing the album's unique packaging. Storm was never content merely to provide "decorative embroidery" for an album. He made it a point to take some meaning from the songs intending it serve as a stepping stone towards getting an image.

Azimuth Coordinator • 1975-1980